FINE TRIBUTE OF BAR ASSOCIATION

Lawyers Pay Final Respects in Court to Thomas Maloney's Memory.

In compliance with the wishes of the Weber County Bar association, Judge J. A. Howell set yesterday morning apart as the time for receiving the resolutions of respect passed by the association in respect to the death of the late Thomas Maloney. There was a large attendance of the members of the association present in court when the court announced that this matter would precede all other business. After the convening of court, J. H. DeVine, secretary of the bar association, read the resolutions, which were printed at the time of their adoption by the association. Addresses were then delivered by Judge A. R. Heywood of Ogden and Attorney A. J. Weber of Salt Lake, Judge Heywood said in part:

"The other day I thought perhaps to get in better touch with this question I would seek a little local coloring from the office of Brother Maloney. Sitting in his chair, I reflected back to when he was chair, I reflected back to when he was there. How many times I have seen him, when not interested in a client, with a book in his hands, and I thought of the scenes that had shifted by his horizon as he would sit there each day.

Lived Through Stirring Times.

Lived Through Stirring Times.

'His career dates back so that he has seen many of the living, active times of this country. As he sits there, he first thinks of his old employer, Andrew Johnson. What a career was there; what an illustration of the possibilities of our country! Brother Maloney knew just what Johnson had been through; knew that when he was married he could scarcely read, and that by the efforts of his wife he was able to acquire some education; saw him next as senator, vice president, president, and then go down from the hearts of the people; saw that illiterate man going down, saw him rise again to be United States senator, and a career again opened before him, only to be dashed to pieces by the grim hand of death. He saw this man coming almost from the hotbed of secession; he saw this man and heard him make more radical man and heard him make more radical speeches against those people than could be heard in almost any state in the north, excepting possibly Massachusetts. He excepting possibly Massachusetts. He saw that man become military governor of what seemed to many people on that soil a foreign country; military governor over that people—saw all these things. Saw himself, starting as a humble soldier, rise to be beloved by his people. In his own books he could read the constitutional history of this country. He could read all about the early founders of the government who had put their thoughts in words.

government who had put their thoughts in words.

"In that office alone, may it please the court, right there may be read the history of this country since the time of the foundation of the Republican party, which perhaps is the second or third epoch of the important data of the country. He could see right there in his own history what had transpired in that of his government. There came to my mind a likeness to the captain of the Nautilus, who asked that when he had breathed his last his friend should open the valves and let that boat go to the bottom with him alone in it and there rest forever; and I thought if Brother Maloney had had his way, if he could have had that office, with his books around him, that old, humble office—if in some way the earth could have opened and that office be dropped down with Brother Maloney, and the earth covariated way. with Brother Maloney, and the earth covered over it, it would have been the best illustration and the most fitting resting place of a loyal soldier, a faithful friend place of a loyal soldier, a faithful friend

It was characteristic of Mr. Maloney that he never tried to advance his own political forfunes and never solicited either judicial or political bonors. Forgetful of self, his constant desire was for the success of the principles represented by his party. Always cheerful, always contented, his aim was to banish the bitterness of political strife and to have others as well as himself avoid unpleasant personalities and extreme partisanship. In the storm, he was always calm; in the strife of politics and of partisanship, he was always the courteous gentleman, and these qualities were characteristic of his whole life. In ordinary times a military life would have had no attractions for him; war was hateful to his nature. To him the victories of peace seemed grander than the triumphs of war.
